

Pegasus' Rescue

In Ancient Greece in times of Gods and heroes, Pegasus was kidnapped.

Pegasus was the flying horse of Zeus. He was the only horse that had the ability to fly, so Zeus asked Hercules, his son, to rescue Pegasus.

Hercules, realizing the difficult task he would have to face, decided to gather other heroes to help him.

Thus, the Argonauts reunited to face a new adventure!

They went to the island of Crete, but did not find Pegasus. They then decided to go to the island of Leukad, where they found Pegasus. However, they quickly realized that they had fallen into a trap of the Cerberus and the Minotaur.

By the time Hercules realized it was too late, but he still decided to warn the other Argonauts:

-It's a trap! –Screamed.

A very loud roar was heard:

- Hmhmhm...

"Oh no, it's the Minotaur!!! – identified Orpheus.

- Rrrrr hauhau!!

-Cerberus is also there!!! – replied Hercules, after hearing the unmistakable roar.

The trap set for the Argonauts consisted of a battle against 110 Centaurs and a Kraken.

The Argonauts realized that the best way to defeat the Centaurs, Minotaur, and Cerberus was to split forces.

Theseus noticed the Minotaur's attacking movements and caused him to stick his horns into the wall and get stuck, taking advantage of this moment to kill him.

The Boris, two brothers with wings, decided to try to defeat Cerberus.

For this, they went from behind and attacked using their swords. But the swords were being useless. They had to think of a better strategy.

They decided that while one of them was distracting one of the heads, the other was attacking the other two. But one was missing: the strongest. The two of them had to attack that head. They found a rope on the ground and had an idea: they took the two of them at the ends of the rope and wrapped it around the neck of Cerberus' last head. Then they pulled the rope, managing to kill him.

The rest of the Argonauts killed the Centaurs using shields to defend themselves from the arrows and to push them by skewering spears at them.

Then the Argonauts found the Pegasus imprisoned in a cell. They destroyed the cell and fled, using the Minotaur's boat.

Thanks to the help of his friends, Hercules was able to rescue Pegasus and returned him to Zeus.

Work done in Schol , Portugal, by:

Salvador Peixoto, 7 years old, 1st grade

Maria Rodrigues, 7 years old, 1st grade

Gaspar Guedes, 8 years old, 2nd grade

Beatrice Ladle, 8 years old, 2nd grade

Teacher: Sofia Sousa